Smokey's Next 70 Years

I heard something shocking at the Smokey Bear Association convention last April in Oregon. We have long taken for granted that everyone knows Smokey and we are always pleased to quote the market research that found Smokey is recognized second only to Santa Claus and far ahead of virtually all politicians. But at our meeting, a Forest Service speaker said that more and more kids have not heard of Smokey. She said, "The closer you get to (I'll spare the city's name), the more kids who don't know who Smokey Bear is."

The message I came away with is that we can't rest on the laurels garnered by Smokey over the past 70 years. This year's milestone celebration has been great. The public service announcements and news media coverage has stimulated renewed awareness of Smokey and his campaign. But we can't let it end or wait until the 75th to give Smokey's message the exposure it needs. Educating the newest generation of children is imperative and it won't happen without continuous effort.

I left the convention more determined than ever to do my part to help keep alive the spirit of wildfire prevention – especially among the kids who are the future users of our forests. Whether they live within or near the urban-wildland interface, or have never yet been out of the city, the future stewardship of our nation's forests rest to a large degree with them. As the 70th winds down and a new year begins, I promise to provide fast, friendly service and a wide array of materials you can use for education, gifts and generally keeping Smokey's image in front of all segments of our urbanizing society. Thanks for your help.
